A high blood pressure (BP) level is a common comorbidity and it has been argued that adequate management of the associated cardiovascular risk factors in patients with diabetes is desirable. There is increasing evidence that the renin-angiotensin system plays an important role in the pathogenesis of hypertension in diabetes, and angiotensin receptor blockers (ARBs) appear to be particularly well suited for use in type 2 diabetes. Several large-scale studies have demonstrated the efficacy of this class of agent in reducing BP in both primary and secondary prevention of cardiovascular disease. In addition, there have been well-designed clinical studies in which the antihypertensive effect has been compared with that produced by other class of antihypertensive agents. The BP-lowering properties of ARBs in these studies have generally been superior to those of other classes of antihypertensive agents. Furthermore, in a recent post-hoc analysis of the United Kingdom Prospective Diabetes Study (UKPDS), ARB treatment was associated with a 31% relative reduction in the risk of mortality in patients with type 2 diabetes, which was comparable to that observed with the angiotensin converting enzyme (ACE) inhibitor l

Multiple search criteria Focusing on speed, CSearcher is a non-indexing application that can help you look for any file on your computer based on several criteria, not just a file's name and type. In fact, it enables you to configure exact search and exclusion patterns to get the most accurate results and quickly find the file you are looking for. Name and location filtering is also possible, and there are dedicated fields you have to fill in. Additionally, CSearcher can be configured to also reveal hidden files and folders. For your convenience, you can filter all the duplicate files, either by name or by the MD5 conference. Broad range of search criteria and options Aside from the aforementioned criteria, CSearcher can also take into account the date and the time a file was created, last modified or accessed. Moreover, there are size restrictions that allow you to look for files either smaller or larger than a specific size. Not only that you can filter the search with the criteria mentioned before, but you can also add file content restrictions to log or exclude files that include a specific string. Once you hit the 'start' button, CSearcher displays all the matches within its main window, in a table that includes the original location, the last modification date, the size and the extension. Both the search criteria and the extensions can be saved and loaded anytime needed. Filter the search results to quickly find a file With CSearcher, files undergo a selection process that narrows down the search results.
