Behavioral methods were used to study the role of the parietal cortex in the formation of conditioned and unconditioned reactions in rats. The extent of the formation of conditioned reflexes was tested by the variable-interval (VI) and continuous reinforcement (CR) methods, and the extinction of unconditioned reflexes by the VI method. Functional ablation of the superior posterior parietal cortex with the electrolytic current was found to sharply reduce the extinction of the conditioned reactions on stimulation of the somatosensory cortex or the aortic nerve in both the CR and VI methods. The results show that at the second stage of conditioning, the extinction of a conditioned reflex is more labile and dependent on intact processes of the parietal cortex than at the first stage.
