Posts Tagged 'firearms trade' As a firearms enthusiast I was disturbed to read this week that over 300 Porsches and other German luxury cars were burnt in a fire outside a fire station in the town of Bad Ems in Germany. This fire occurred shortly before 9.00 PM on Monday when a collection of 170 registered cars and luxury vehicles (all with a market value of over €100,000) were parked in front of the fire station in the town of Bad Ems. As we all know fires can easily start in well kept car parks. However, there are suggestions that the cars have been torched by animal rights activists. Between the hours of 7.00 PM on Monday 22nd of March and 9.00 PM on Tuesday 23rd of March (including all nights and Monday) the vehicles were parked in the town's parking lot were they ran the risk of being set alight. Since it is illegal in Germany to cause a fire it is assumed that the car-torching, animal rights activists are receiving assistance from others and that this may be in the form of arson. This article was first published on the website of a German magazine called "Focus Online". A number of German and international civil rights organizations have expressed their outrage and indignation in the comments section of this article and have called for an investigation to take place. One of the most prominent concerns that these civil rights organizations have expressed is that there is a lack of clarity over who is allowed to obtain a permit to obtain firearms and who is not. Whether you agree or disagree with that particular point of view there is no doubt that it is a fact. If you were one of the thousands of other citizens of Germany who illegally import firearms into the country the chances of being stopped and searched by the police are almost non-existent. Article 101 of the German Constitution states: "Anyone who has legal reason to own, transport and use firearms for the purpose of hunting, training and self-defense as well as for target shooting will be allowed to do so, except if there are sufficient reasons not to do so." The German Criminal Code takes it further by stating: "The legal right to own, transport and use firearms may not be restricted." For those seeking additional and fuller clarification on this particular point of view see the articles relating to the United Nations treaties and the

Using the Liquify Filter You can use the Liquify filter to create interesting effects with any of the tools found in Photoshop. They can be used in combination with each other. There are three basic ways to use the Liquify tool: Liquify can be used to stretch or squish an object in one direction or in two directions. You can also use it to change the direction of rotation for an object. To use the Liquify tool, follow these steps: 1. Choose Filter > Liquify. 2. In the box that opens up, make a selection that defines an area that needs to be stretched. (It may be a single brush stroke, a path, or the entire image.) Then click the Transform Selected button. The Transform Selected tool applies the Liquify filter to whatever you select. 3. Click the destination point to add a new point. 4. Move the slider to adjust the amount of the effect you desire. You can increase the strength of the Liquify tool in the Optimize For dialog box. You can also adjust the position and rotation of the point in the dialog box. When you're finished working, click OK. The Liquify tool is very powerful and can do some pretty cool things. To help you use it to its full potential, you may want to check out
