rather. I first heard Sandra Bullock when playing Mean Girls in the movie theatre and I immediately developed a visceral response to her. She has that effect on people. There's something about her that shouts "I'm fun! I'm comfortable in my own skin!" I've been following her career for years but only recently started to put my finger on the thing that really grabs me about her; she writes her own scripts. She's the only female director I know of that has been both a writer and director in the same movie. Bullock wrote her first script, a comedy called Cutaway, in college and then later, with Gravity, wrote and directed her first feature. For a couple of years, it was the only time she broke into movies, until she started writing and directing. I'm not sure what I was expecting when I first watched her directorial debut, but it certainly wasn't an Oscar winning performance as Miss Congeniality. I'm a movie critic, so I didn't expect to love anything about Bullock's performance. Then, I watched Gravity and I was amazed. I thought she absolutely nailed it. She got the physicality, she nailed the part of the smart-assy (not in a "who can be a little mean" way) but in a "what I can't help it, my brain works differently" way. She was a bundle of inner turmoil, jokes, and lessons learned. So when she received an Oscar for the Best Actress performance, I was baffled. I didn't think she deserved it, but I had to admit, she was far more interesting in Gravity than I could have imagined. I'm a stickler for "character" when I watch movies. And, I'm a stickler for being that character
